Morning Choral Concert.

THE Morning Choral, an organization of about sixty women, will give its winter concert at the Odeon next Tuesday night. Charles Galloway will conduct and Paul Friess will be accompanist. The assisting artists will be Edgar Schofield, baritone, of New York, who sang here in recital with Geraldine Farrar last season, and John F. Kiburz, flutist in the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Schofield will sing the aria, "Vision Fugitive," from Massenet's "Manon," and two groups of songs, including "Vittoria," by Giacomini; "Povero Marinar," by Milliotti; "L'Angeles," a Breton folk song, and "Le Cor," by Flagler. He also will sing "I'm the Pedler," by Greenhill; "At the Mid-Hour of Night," by Harris; "Birds in the High Hall," by Somerville, and "The Great Awakening," by Somerville.

The choral club will sing the cantata, "Pan's Flute," by Carl Busch, and in this will be assisted by Mr. Schofield. The club also will sing "The Miller's Daughter," by Brahms; "Madonna Renzuela," by Donaudy-Deems-Taylor; "London Bridge," by Cecil Forsythe, in which Mrs. Charles E. Blankenship will be soloist; "Rock-a-Bye" by Neillinger, and "The Song of Kisses" in which Miss Frances Alcorn will have the solo part.

ALTON CLUB SUSPENDS

The Dominant Ninth Choral Society of Alton, the organization which, under the direction of Mrs. Cora Dolbec Rohland, for the last thirty years has given some of the greatest choral masterpieces, has disbanded, because the state of Mrs. Rohland's health makes it inadvisable for her to continue the work of directing the organization. The officers of the society feel that there is no one in Alton to whom they may turn to take her place.

There was adequate financial backing for the society to continue its work, and preparations had been made to sing Elgar's "Black Knight" and Liszt's setting of the thirteenth psalm at the annual concert next April. These plans, however, have been abandoned, and the society has wound up its affairs.

In the membership of eighty there were three who had been with the organization since its founding thirty years ago—Miss Minnie Boals, Mrs.
